

BRIDGE

It was early in the morning and the sun was rising in the sky. There was a big wobbly bridge very high up above a deep river. Two animals were trying to cross the bridge. One was a moody bear and the other was tired moose. When the bear and the moose met in the middle they were angry. They pushed and shoved each other to get past so they could get to the other side.

"I will eat you go back moose go back to the beginning now!" bear said fiercely.

"You can't eat me you silly old bear!" yelled moose. The little raccoon gently tapped the bear on the back of his back.

"Please can I get past?" Bear picked up the Kind raccoon and hit him on the head then chucked him to the beginning and the raccoon had a humungous lump.

"You big moose you nearly squashed me you need to get out of my way!" The moose kicked the rabbit to the star of the bridge. The rabbit thought that the moose is bad. Then the rabbit was biting the rope and the raccoon was untying the other side of the bridge and bear and moose fell into the water.

Rabbit and raccoon were in the same situation as the bear and the moose.

They looked at each other and thought.

The raccoon had a brilliant idea but the rabbit didn't know what the raccoon was doing and the rabbit hopped over him and they were happy ever after.
