

Bridge

One sunny morning there was a sleepy moose and a grumpy brown bear. The moose just woke up same as the bear. They went to get on a rickety bridge but they were going different ways. So they were stuck on the bridge.

"Oh no!" they said. They were shoving to get past. The bridge wobbled a bit. They were so stubborn then the bear said to the moose.

"You go back!" but the moose replied, "No you go back I need to go that way!" replied the bear meanly. A cute raccoon got on the bridge and tapped the bear on the back. The bear turned around and picked the raccoon up and hit him on the head he flew in the air and fell to the ground.

"Can I get past please?" asked raccoon politely. A little fat rabbit came along moose fell and nearly squashed him.

The rabbit said, "You could have squashed me!" Moose picked rabbit up by the ears and kicked rabbit away. He started to bite the string of the bridge. Then the raccoon did it too.

"Oh no!" they said. The bridge broke and they fell into the river. Rabbit and raccoon realised that they were in the same situation as bear and moose.

Raccoon had an idea and bent down and rabbit didn't understand. Then rabbit realised and jumped over raccoon and waved goodbye.
