Wily Wolf foiled by Woodsman

By: Tab Lloyd

Little Red Riding Hood and her gran have been saved from the jaws of death (well wolf actually), by a local Woodsman.

Yesterday, Little Red Riding Hood and her gran had a close shave, when she was delivering some cakes that her mum had made to her gran's house in the woods. Instead of going straight to gran's house, Little Red became distracted and that's when the wily wolf set his trap. He realised that it would be foolish to eat Little Red there and then, as he had seen a woodsman nearby. Instead, he challenged her to a race to her to gran's house, so he could carry out his plan. Once there, he gobbled gran up in one bite, before taking her place in bed.

The crafty fellow had dressed in gran's nightgown and cap, but was unable to disguise his bold features, namely large snout and teeth. Red Riding Hood recognised the danger that she was in, and screamed for help, whilst running out of the cottage.

Immediately, the woodsman raced to the scene, grabbed the wolf by his tail and shook him until gran popped out, shaken but not stirred by the event. However, she was a little bit smelly.

When interviewed the woodsman said, "I heard the little girl's screams and knew that the bushy tailed beast was up to no good. I've taken him far, far away and told him never to darken these woods again."

This newspaper thinks that the woodsman deserves a medal for his courageous act of heroism.

Little Red Riding hood and her gran celebrated by sharing the cakes that mum made, together with a pot of tea, with the brave woodsman.
